Every day businesses of all sizes experience thousands of safety and security incidents that put their very existence at risk. In fact, recent studies show that the majority of companies that experience a major crisis will go out of business within two years of the event.

These crises come in many forms, such as:

- Threatening communication
- Sexual harassment
- Inventory shrinkage
- Employee fraud
- Intellectual property theft
- Product counterfeiting
- Bomb threats
- Extortion

And yet, few organizations – especially those with less than 500 employees – have effective methods in place to address the safety and security risks put upon their business and employees.

Regardless of the size of your organization, there are core principles and initiatives that can easily be put into place to effectively design a safe and secure environment. These include:

- Formal communication and reporting mechanisms
 - Risks analyses
 - Effective policies and procedures
 - Management and staff training programs
 - Group initiatives such as:
 - ✓ pre-employment screening
 - ✓ workplace violence prevention
 - ✓ intellectual property protection
 - ✓ due diligence investigations
 - ✓ emergency management
 - ✓ crisis management planning
- ... and more.
